Introduction

Using this go-to guide, we aim to provide you with all the necessary tools to support your recruitment process. By completing these exercises and allowing yourself to consider recruitment from multiple perspectives, we aspire for you to develop a new understanding of your company and its likely impacts on various stakeholders.

We believe, that forming a complete understanding of what you want out of your recruitment process, as well as what you can do to support it, is the key to creating a long-term partnership and ongoing, reliable recruitment.

By viewing recruitment from a candidate standpoint, as an employer, this can be an eye opening process that could transform the way you recruit. One of our core objectives is to help you tackle the common unconscious bias and stereotyping that can occur in any company's recruitment process by seeing beyond the CV and considering candidates for exactly who they are.

Whether this document serves as an opportunity to change your perspective or just a great reminder of ways to support current and future employees, we hope you see value in it regardless of whether you choose to partner with Wild Recruitment.

Your Candidate Selection Timeline

How often do your managers, directors, or supervisors meet with new employees to ensure their onboarding process has been smooth?

How long would you expect your recruitment process to take (from initial brief to placement)?

What methods do you currently undergo to seek new employees?

What procedures might you put in place to analyse if an applicant is fit for a particular job role?

What systems for induction do you currently have in place to ensure all employees receive proper training and have a full understanding of their day-to-day tasks?

Did you know?
The Society of Human Resource Management reports that the average time to fill a position is 42 days.

Did you know?
An executive candidate who's more likely to be sourced, may be on the market for fewer than 10 days.*

Positive Work Culture

A positive work culture is a highly underrated perk that any company can develop by making even minor changes to their onboarding methods and day-to-day approach to company operations. One of the most common questions a candidate asks in discussion of a new role is:

"What is the culture of the organisation like?"

So as employers, it is our responsibility to ensure that the answer to that question is always positive. Unlike other workplace perks, work culture is something that comes at zero cost and can have a dramatic impact on employee happiness. But how do you build a culture desirable to current and future employees?

It's important to recognise that changing a workplace culture doesn't require a complete overhaul. Sometimes, simple changes and added support from directors and managers can be all that you need to create a new environment. Forming an understanding of your company's current culture and what can be improved is the first step. Secondly, employees are more motivated when they feel that they have purpose. Determining clear company values, morals and a powerful mission statement can help employees to recognise how their day-to-day work positively impacts the company, as well as its clients and customers. Finally culture is about your people. Ask your new recruits about their experience whilst it's new and fresh in their minds.

How can you make the workplace a better environment for your employees?

From the get go, employees want to feel cared for and that their wellness is important. Creating a clear plan for directors and managers to follow and setting the tone for other employees is crucial to creating consistency, company wide.

At Wild Recruitment we care about the culture of your workplace and aim not just to provide you with employees that are a good cultural fit, but to work with you in creating a culture that you can be proud of.

How can we transform your candidate selection timeline?

Candidate Perception and Recruitment

In the 1990's, researchers Arien Mack and Irvin Rock discovered a psychological phenomenon that causes human's perception and ability to recognise unexpected stimuli to become distorted when we possess previous expectations or opinions. From a recruitment standpoint, a similar situation can occur when employers develop specific expectations and therefore tend to see the candidate they expect rather than the actual traits and personality they possess.

So how can Wild Recruitment help?

At Wild Recruitment, we are experts in our field and do more than deliver candidates that suit your needs on paper. We conduct a thorough interview process and are dedicated to providing you with candidates that fit your needs, beyond their prior experience.

By putting your trust in us, potential candidates will receive an outside take on their suitability to a role. We want to work with you to produce a clear strategy and timeline to support your candidate search and beyond.

We work in partnership with you rather than just ticking boxes, forming long-term relationships with our clients and, with your help, are able to source high quality candidates that exceed all expectations.

The first step to a better recruitment process...

By now you've hopefully had a chance to read over our Recruitment Strategy Toolkit. With these exercises and our combined know-how, there is the potential to form a partnership where we gain further understanding of your needs while providing you with improved recruitment outcomes.

By investing time in our consultants and the process, our aim is to have a transformative effect on our customers and recruitment.

We hope you enjoyed this toolkit and we would be delighted to answer any further questions or explain our recruitment service in more detail.
